

Facebook Jargon

Facebook is an online community that allows people to connect and reconnect with old and new friends, family members, former classmates, and just about anybody else.

I'm trying to tell a friend about Facebook. How do you explain Facebook to someone who's never been on it?

Jason & Kelli:

Imagine a never-ending, ever-evolving gathering of family, friends, and acquaintances from your past, present, and future. That's Facebook.

Facebook is an online community that allows people to connect and reconnect with old and new friends, family members, former classmates, and just about anybody else (Facebook calls them friends, and from here on we'll refer to them as FB Friends). The brilliance of Facebook is that you can connect with more people from your past and present than you ever could by making phone calls, sending emails, and mailing letters combined.

Jason:

With a fraction of the time and energy.

Jason & Kelli:

On Facebook, you share what's going on in your life. In real-time, your updates show up on all of your FB Friends' Home Pages where they can read it, react to it, comment on it, or ignore it.

And at the same time, your Home Page will show the latest updates by your FB Friends.

In addition to viewing what their FB Friends are doing, people share photos and videos, send links and articles, play games, join different Groups, become fans of different Pages, send emails, and chat with each other through Facebook.

Kelli:

To me, Facebook is more than just a website. It is a part of my daily routine to stay in contact and keep up with people I care about.
